CHARLES HILTON ARCHITECTS

A few surprises were in store for Charles Hilton Architects during the renovation of this home, a 9,000-square-foot Colonial in Greenwich's historic Conyer's Farm neighborhood. Though only built in 1989, the house's inconsistent proportions, outdated exterior and tired interior prevented it from realizing its true Georgian Colonial potential. Instead of a gut renovation, the team also needed to work within the space's existing volumes and interior spaces. Outside, the chimney and roof saw an upgrade—with work completed while the family still lived in the home—along with completely redesigned masonry and detailing to showcase Georgian elegance. Inside, new millwork and trim elevate the rooms, especially the double-height living room with its shell-top cabinets and stately paneling. With cutting-edge updates and classic details to bring on the drama, Hilton brought the home into this century and at once infused it with a rich history. —NT

HILTON INTERIORS

This airy kitchen strikes just the right vibe for a beachside vacation home. Incorporating work spaces, dining areas and a breezy connection to the outdoors, this gathering hub for a family of five includes a breakfast nook with a cozy window seat and a dining table that expands for frequent houseguests. The generous island is topped with a single slab of Brazilian Blue Bahia stone, which proved durable enough for a sink and prep area as well for dining and serving. The shimmer of the island perfectly complements the glass seascape mosaic tile backsplash behind the cooktop. Featuring starfish and octopus, the tile is highlighted with silver grout, and the stainless-steel range and hood mirror the sparkle found in the nickel light fixtures and hardware. With its seaside-inspired color palette marrying well with the clients' porcelain collection, the space delivers an open floor plan with a spectacular indoor/outdoor flow. —LF
