Bath Design

✧ Charles Hilton Architects

Having secured a prime site on a scenic cove along Long Island Sound, this family requested a bath that would take full advantage of the New England shingle-style home's gorgeous setting. A vaulted ceiling rests on an entablature that rings the room and is supported by paneled pilasters framing the openings in each face of the octagonal master bath. Gary Brewer says the space "balances classic details with a calm palette and sensible planning," by way of a paneled tub front set into a paneled niche beautifully complimented by a raised marble shower and water closet.

Bedroom

∧ Charles Hilton Architects

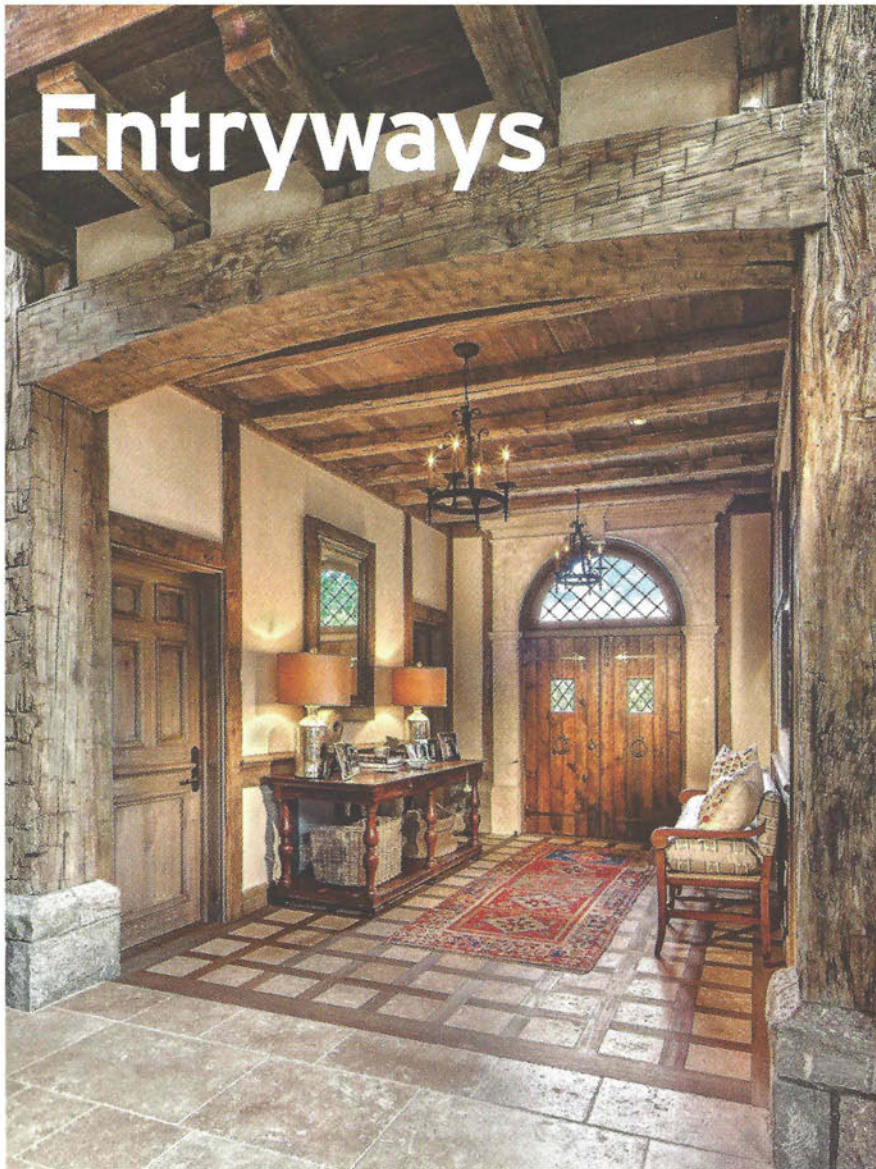

This master bedroom occupies the upper floor of a stone tower that serves as the focal point of a New French Normandy residence. Inswing French doors open onto wrought iron balconies that incorporate decorative antique grills and provide commanding views of the owner's beloved gardens and fruit orchard. The private spiral staircase leads to a bright and simply furnished study at the top of the tower. Nathan Turner calls it a "very elegant, traditional bedroom with beautifully executed architectural details."

Charles Hilton created this reception hall in a new house that was designed with a French Normandy Barn aesthetic. Inspiration was found in the working farm at Marie Antoinette's Petite Hamlet on the grounds of Versailles and the client's desire to expand his beloved gardens with his own organic farm. Richard Hartlage loves the use of exposed wood beams, flooring details, and reclaimed wood.

Inspired by the working farm at Marie Antoinette's Petit Hamlet on the grounds of Versailles, this new house was designed to reflect a French Normandy barn. A steeply pitched graduated slate roof, pierced with engaged timber dormers and walls of half-timbering, in-filled with rustic terra cotta brick tiles, gives the house its unique rustic character. The dramatic central great room is the home's focal point, and a walk-in Carmague limestone fireplace sits counterpoint to a double-height bay window that has views across the home's extensive gardens. Ed Siegel likes the "elegant domestically scaled details" of the exterior.
